

The Doctoral Research Program Lecture Series Presents:

Preparing For a Successful Academic Job Interview Using Social Media

Tuesday, November 3
259 Educational Sciences
3-4 PM

It has become difficult to ignore the key role that social media currently play in everyday life, from students that use Facebook as their primary gateway to information to Twitter's influence on the recent Iranian elections. Join Sean Duncan as he argues for the importance of an aggressive use of social media by graduate students in Education heading out onto the academic job market. This presentation will relay personal experiences using social media both as a way to secure a job interview and as a means to prepare for a successful interview, highlighting the importance of numerous online social networking opportunities (Facebook, Twitter, Linked.In), the use of personal websites/blogs, and the judicious use of Google in preparing oneself for the interview process.

date

11/3/2009

location

259 EDUCATIONAL SCIENCES

time

3-4 PM

Sean C. Duncan, Doctoral Candidate in C&I, incoming C. Michael Armstrong Professor at in the School of Education, Health, and Society and Armstrong Institute for Interactive Media Studies at Miami University, Ohio